Course Code and Title	CC1001, Global Christianities and Intra-Religious Diversity
Course Description	This course explores the varied, adapting, and complex elements of Christianity as a global religion and social phenomenon. The intra-religious distinctions across geographical expressions of Christian religious practice and theology are as diverse and varied as the diversities among all religions. With that in view, the course introduces students to the dynamics of religion among emerging Christian communities, diasporas that construct faith communities on a spectrum of engagement with culture and other religious expressions. Students will gain a sophisticated and critical understanding of Christianity and its theological constructions in global settings, which underscore the diversity, complexity, and flexible nature of religion (including settings in which Christianity melds with indigenous traditions).
Modality and Schedule	Asynchronous
Grading Options	Letter
Credit Hours	3
Instructor	Dr. Victor Ezigbo
Prerequisites and Eligibility	Prerequisite: Invitation to Christian Theology

For BSK M.Div. students, this course will count as a BHMT restricted elective (in the area of Mission), or as a free elective.
